UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
DISTRICT OF OREGON

DIANE ROARK,

Case No.: 6:12-CV-01354-MC

Plaintiff,

PLAINTIFF'S RESPONSE TO DEFENDANT'S PROPOSED PLAN FOR RETURN OF ELECTRONICALLY STORED INFORMATION

v.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Defendant.

Pursuant to the Court's order dated May 4, 2015 (Dkt # 110), Plaintiff Diane Roark submits this response to Defendant's proposed plan for return of electronically stored information (ESI) from her computer that was seized on July 26, 2007.

AUSA James Cox told Plaintiff the government's current proposal applies only to the initial stage for return of the property. Therefore, later details and arrangements are not covered in its proposal or in this response. The following are points for which clarification would be appropriate or where there appears to be disagreement.

Scope of return. Plaintiff again states that the electronic documents she seeks are only those associated with her own user-created or received (e.g. email) files, not those of other family members or guests. System files are not sought by Plaintiff.

In the Windows environment on Plaintiff's seized computer, the term "user profile" is a record of user-specific data that define the user's working environment. It includes what the user sees on her computer screen, as well as what files, applications and directories [other than other persons' profiles in her capacity as system administrator] to which she had access.

<http://searchsecurity.techtarget.com/definition/user-profile>. Therefore, documents created or received by Plaintiff, including emails, are portions of her user profile. Plaintiff possessed no electronic devices to facilitate a roaming profile. In Windows XP, used on the seized computer, the user profile is not created by establishing a user account, but rather by the user interactively logging on to the computer. https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/User_profiles_in_Microsoft_Windows. "A user profile is a visual display of personal data associated with a specific user, or a customized desktop environment. A profile refers therefore to the explicit digital representation of a person's identity."

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/User_profile.

Clarification of Current Status of Search and Review. The Court assessed that currently disputed items consist of twenty-two documents/notebooks and a computer hard drive (Dkt #110, p. 6). However, there are currently an unknown number of (paper and perhaps other) documents that the government does not wish to return, because some of the government's enumerated listings contain more than one document. The only total that can be derived from information the government has provided is the number of pages to be withheld to date,¹ including some computer Word documents. It would be appropriate for the government to provide transparency to the Court by individually listing documents that currently are grouped together.

The government stated that its first step will be to conduct automated NSA and HPSCI key word searches of all of Plaintiff's computer files except photos. However, it was Plaintiff's prior understanding that this already may have been done for many or all documents, even for emails, before she requested that the electronic search be halted. Defendant should state whether it intends to update, supplement or repeat any key word search or manual review. If so, the justification for doing so should be presented and reviewed by the Court, with an opportunity for Plaintiff to object if she so desires.

It had appeared that electronic Word documents from the hard drive were both searched and reviewed, because some appear to be included in the count of alleged classified or protected documents. It should be made clear whether Plaintiff's more than 10,000 emails were searched with NSA's and/or HPSCI's separately selected key words, and if so whether any "hits" had been manually reviewed. Likewise, other computer categories, such as photos, may already have been searched and/or reviewed. At least a partial estimate of how long the review will take may currently be provided if the number of such previous hits are known, according to the government, especially if some of the computer material already has been reviewed.

Reasons for Withholding Individual Documents. According to the Declaration of Steven T. before the Maryland court in Wiebe et al. v. NSA et al., NSA does keep track of what documents it withholds as well as their alleged classification level.² Plaintiff should be provided this information, with classified titles partially redacted if necessary. Information on "Unclassified/Protected" documents should include the title of the document and date/sender of the email, plus the reason for withholding (e.g., name of current employee, name of NSA retiree, classification). HPSCI provided more information identifying documents and alleged classification than did NSA.

Metadata Identification of Material Withheld. Both the government and the Court have committed to following the decision and procedures agreed in the Maryland case Wiebe et al. v. NSA et al. In that case, pursuant to guidance by Magistrate Judge Gallagher, the last two Maryland plaintiffs whose material was reviewed actively sought and were given metadata on items that the government kept, after arguing that seizure of their material without proper and specific notification would violate their due process rights. A sample of the metadata provided to Edward Loomis is at Tab 1. A similar sample given to Thomas Drake is at Tab 2.

² Attachment filed 12/31/14, tables on pages 4, 5 and 6. Attached to Docket 96, Defendant's Response to Plaintiff's Cross-Motion for Summary Judgment.

Plaintiff has the same rights. However, the government did not include metadata in its proposed procedure for return of property. This appears to have been the main reason why the government stated that agreement on procedures could not be reached.

Plaintiff points out other documented evidence (“Snowden” papers) and public government admissions that NSA has since at least October 2001 collected, at minimum, phone and email metadata on domestic and foreign persons, at enormous fiber optic rates of speed. This process obviously is highly automated and, as the samples provided by Messrs. Loomis and Drake illustrate, a smaller number of metadata fields easily are provided to victims of NSA searches or searches conducted by NSA on behalf of HPSCI. Defendants can provide no persuasive reason for refusal to do so. Plaintiff requests a Court ruling in this regard.

Returning Searchable Emails. The government states that AOL email messages are in a less-common file format and cannot be extracted from the hard drive in their native format. Therefore, these files will be returned as plain text files. According to http://www.webopedia.com/TERM/P/plain_text.html, “plain text”

“Refers to textual data in ASCII format. Plain text is the most portable format because it is supported by nearly every application on every machine. It is quite limited, however, because it cannot contain any formatting commands.” (Emphasis added.)

“Commands” are instructions to a computer or device to perform a specific task, e.g. keywords, menu choices, function keys. <http://www.webopedia.com/TERM/C/command.html>. The “user interface” therefore is much more limited than normal, and common functions such as ability to search, highlight, copy, delete, print, mark as important, re-format, etc., may be unavailable.

The only essential function of plain text is that content be readable. The appearance and format (e.g. lines, paragraphs, display and appearance) may be entirely different from the original. “The relationship between appearance and content of plain text may be summarized as follows: Plain text must contain enough information to permit the text to be rendered legibly, and nothing more.”

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Plain_text. This means it is likely to be much more difficult to read, as well as to understand the writer's original intent, because formatting is part of context. It seems that an entire, lengthy document may even be rendered as one single-spaced paragraph, e.g. The government admitted by telephone that the emails would be harder to read, might not include information such as “bcc” recipients, and might contain only the content of the email, not the metadata, thereby rendering these thousands of emails unsearchable as well as very difficult to read and perhaps lacking even the dates on which they were written.

In practical terms these severe limitations could render the emails virtually useless to Plaintiff.

NSA previously stated, in attempting to justify its failure to find the emails despite Plaintiff's insistence that they were on the hard drive, that the email format on Plaintiff's computer is the earlier of two AOL formats. Plaintiff signed up for the email in January 2001, as AOL was nearing its peak as a highly competitive internet provider, with up to 27 million US subscribers after the 9/11 attacks in 2001 (see the chart at <https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/AOL>). Clearly, AOL would have been an important target that NSA had to learn to exploit in its chosen post-9/11 definition of mission. It is not clear why the world's ranking exploiter of computers for years was unable to find any of the emails that Plaintiff repeatedly insisted were on her computer and now apparently cannot retrieve these documents in useful and searchable electronic format.

Plaintiff points out that her papers must be returned in usable form, or her property rights are violated. NSA and HPSCI insist that they have extraordinary rights to search Plaintiff's computer beyond the particularity requirements of the Fourth Amendment and to retain unclassified documents as they see fit without judicial review. Now NSA claims it can return the great majority of Plaintiff's documents only in a different format that is difficult to read. They also cannot be searched electronically by using key words, although NSA itself has searched or plans to search in this manner for emails of potential interest.

The hard drive that NSA is searching is not the original, but rather is an admittedly searchable electronic copy of the original held by the FBI; NSA has not stated that it is in plain text. Therefore, it is not obvious why a searchable electronic copy in original format cannot also be made for Plaintiff, with prior or subsequent deletions as Defendants claim are necessary. Thus the government's rationale seems doubtful on its face.

Further, Defendants' counsel was asked, if absolutely necessary in lieu of the original format, to provide electronic metadata from the originals, that normally would be available to an email user. In this way, Plaintiff would at least be able to search for emails of interest by date, topic, sender, receiver, etc., if the emails themselves were arranged and marked by date. Even this laborious, inferior arrangement was ignored in Defendant's proposal.

Dated this 6th day of June 2015.

Respectfully submitted,
